

Tobis Henriksen, whose singing, to guitar accompaniment, of "The Very Song the World's Been Waiting For", is a feature of "The Forgotten Factor" at the Hofmeyr Theatre.

Norwegian Bing

IN Cape Town to-day is a motley band of men and women from many parts of the world who have one thing in common—a belief that no new world of contentment will appear in our time until individuals undergo a change of heart to banish selfishness for all time. They are the hot-gospellers of Moral Re-armament.

Among them is Tobis Henriksen, a Norwegian "Bing Crosby" from Oslo, whose guitar number "The Very Song the World's been Waiting For" has been put over the air in the B.B.C. feature "In Town To-night". Last Monday it was heard at a reception in the Mayor's Parlour, Cape Town.

It goes like this:

When I come across a farmer in this country,
I'll just sing to bring a twinkle to his eye....and when I Come across a preacher in the pulpit,
I'll say, "Brother sing your sermon
if it's dry!"

Now everyone likes sentimental ballads. And at Times I think that they are pretty swell—But I'd Rather sing the kind of thing—
Not classics, no, nor is it swing,
But it reaches hearts and changes them as well.

So when you come across a worried-looking statesman, Start singing like you've never sung before ...
And if your song can change the hearts of statesmen, It's the very song the world's been waiting for