London, Saturday.

DR. FRANK BUCHMAN, head of the Oxford Group of Missionaries, which has many adherents in South Africa, is going to clean up the morals of Chicago, where he is proceeding shortly.

Even the critics of the Oxford Group, which, they say, makes its converts mainly at week-end house-parties, admit that it has scored many notable successes in New York in the way of conversions.

Many members of the New York Stock Exchange, according to the "Daily Herald's" New York correspondent, announced their conversion after amazing confessions of their financial activities.

Reformed Bootlegger

Girls from families in New York's "Four Hundred" (the most exclusive set in the United States) are vowing that religion is more exciting than cocktail parties with illicit liquor.

The Group stands for "absolute honesty, purity, unselfishness and love in daily life."

When he left New York for Washington Dr. Buchman took with him "Bill" Pickle, a former bootlegger, who has been a member of the Group for years.

The United States adherents include Russell Firestone, son of the millionaire rubber manufacturer, who led the services on several occasions when stock brokers from Wall Street repented.

The United States sweep finishes in the spring with a house-party in Canada at which a thousand members and converts will be present.

The towns still to be "cleaned up" include Kansas City and Los Angeles.
