

ANGRY YOUNG MEN TO PUT THINGS RIGHT

Special Correspondent

NEW YORK — "We're angrier young men. We are out to put right everything that is wrong in the world."

These words, spoken by an American student leader, sum up the growing attitude of millions of high school and university students from California to Kenya.

To thousands of young Americans, the Peace Corps (brainchild of the late President Kennedy) has offered an opportunity to make a positive contribution to world understanding.

At the present time American youths are serving in various capacities in underdeveloped countries throughout Asia, Africa and South America.

The Americans serving overseas in the Peace Corps are not the only young people concerned about the troubled world situation.

This fact is highlighted in the latest issue of New World News, a Moral Re-Armament picture magazine, which reports a recent convocation of American, Canadian, and Latin American youth on Mackinac Island, Michigan, U.S.A.

Prominent figures

Called the "Conference for Tomorrow's America", the youth gathering featured speeches by prominent public figures and group discussions on various aspects of national life and world affairs.

The voice of young America is being heard in Dare — the nation's newest publication, a 40-page pictorial magazine.

This publication is designed, say the editors, "for the generation who dare not only to go higher into space, deeper under the ocean, harder and faster, but who dare to speak up for what they believe in and want, no matter what anyone may say, think or do.

"It is for a generation who will reverse the morals, manners and methods of out-moded materialism."

In England a 17-year-old girl living in Rainham, Kent, invited 100 of her friends to take part in an impromptu youth gathering at her home.

Moral revolution

She said, "Nowadays, Mods and Rockers constantly hit the headlines. Instead of being a headache, why can't teenagers take responsibility for the way the country goes?"

The main feature of the gathering was a series of discussions on how British youth could help to bring a new spirit to their communities and the country.

In Nigeria, where perhaps half the population is under 15 years of age, the President of the Ibadan University Students' Union called for a "moral revolution" to solve the problems facing the nation.

As reported in the latest bulletin of the M.R.A. (Moral Re-Armament) Information Service, Mr S. O. Oyediji, addressing an audience of 1,000 students, said: "In order to solve the problems confronting us today, we need broadmindedness and a moral revolution."
